NATHouse at TUKS Open Day

On the 19th of May NATHouse was given an opportunity to create awareness to prospective UP students about themselves, our faculty and what the university is all about.

They interacted with learners who came from as far as Bela Bela and Mpumalanga just to be part of this wonderful event. The questions asked were (among the few): "Which degrees does UP have that deal specifically with agricultural science? Why should I come to UP? Where can I get busaries from and what is NATHouse?"

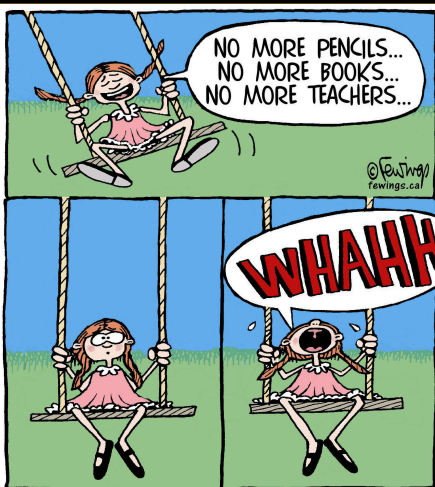

Except for all the interesting learners they met, the pinnacle of the day was meeting our faculty dean, Anton Ströh, it felt like meeting the president. The EC were excited with butterflies in their stomachs and huge cheese smiles on their faces. NATHouse would like to thank him for acknowledging the faculty house.

Lend A Helping Hand

I bet the first thing most of you thought to yourself after writing your first semester test during your first year was: "EISH! If only I had known what kind of questions and level of difficulty to expect for this module's semester test, then maybe I could have done better."

NATHouse Academics is asking all Natural and Agricultural Sciences students to please assist your fellow juniors and senior students with past papers for all modules in the Faculty by donating them to the NATHouse Office (near Oom Gert at the Agric. Annex building), where they can be reused for many generations to come by both juniors and seniors. It's not everybody that has a senior friend who can assist them or afford to buy those papers sold around campus.

Therefore, let us assist one another not only by passing all our modules, but also by actually spending only the prescribed minimum duration at Tuks with our undergraduate degrees.

RUMOUR 101

There is always a time for change, and for our dear faculty house, the time for change is now. (I guess sometimes it hits you more close to home than you would have thought).

Rumour has it, there are a few new faces in the office. So, what happened to old ones? Who are these people? What do they do?

Worry not, the RUMOUR team will let you guys meet all the newbies in the next issue. I hope they have found a home in the NATHouse EC.

How To Have Fun During The Holidays

 by Eric Rex

Holiday is the time to catch up with your long-lost favourite things, that you used to do before the hard work of the semester. There are things that students miss out on during the semester and this is the time to catch up with those fun activities.

The most important thing about semester holidays is to relax and have fun. You can always engage with the following activities just to have fun:

1. Go out with your friends;
2. Have a nice time out away from everything; and
3. Just forget about everything work related.

The other important thing to remember is to have a moment with your loved ones who care about you. This is also your time to catch up with "life" - about everything that is around the world from politics to sports and gossip (for ladies only). The one thing you should not do is to do anything that has to do with academic work (well, unless you have a year module or an honours research project).

Happy holidays and best of luck for the exam.
