Local for Dubai squad

The experienced local star Marithy Pienaar will spearhead the Springbok Women's Sevens' challenge at the Emirates Airline Dubai Sevens International Invitational next week.

Pienaar will be joined by experienced sevens players Zenay Jordaan, Eloise Webb, Mathrin Simmers and another former Tuks player, Nadine Roos, in a youthful-looking squad named by coach Paul Delpport for this tournament, to be played from 29-30 November at The Sevens Stadium in Dubai, with a number of regulars missing out.

Pienaar is taking over the captaincy from regular skipper Zintle Mapupha, who is doing duty with the Springbok Women's team touring Europe at the moment, while Snenhlanhla Shozi, Babalwa Latsha and Zinhle Ndawonde are not available for the Dubai trip due to the same reason.

No less than six players will play for the team for the first time and Delpport feels that his young side should gain from the experience of playing against quality teams and getting used to the intensity and level of other international squads.

"We have to develop our squad and improve our playing depth as we are going into a very important cycle, that of Olympic qualification.

"We need every opportunity we can get to improve and test ourselves against other sides, as we are not part of the HSBC World Rugby Women's Sevens Series and this will provide us with that chance," said Delpport.

South Africa will face Wales, Almaty Women's Sevens (Kazakhstan) and Arukas Queen Kumagaya (Japan) in their pool matches, and Delpport would like his team to enjoy the experience.

"We played Wales at the Commonwealth Games last time, so that will be a good starting point for us to see where we are with the new squad.

"Ultimately, we would like to leave Dubai a better team than the one who arrived there," Delpport concluded.
