

Dr John Bosco Kalule, PhD

Bosco is a veterinarian and microbiologist with a special interest in One Health applications to investigate disease at the human-animal interface. He is also interested in rural livelihood improvement; for example, he was a member of the Combat Disease Diseases of Poverty Consortium (CDPC), in 2008.

He graduated with a PhD in Medical Microbiology from the University of Cape Town in 2017, holds a Masters of Medicine – Microbiology (2011), and a Bachelors of Veterinary Medicine (2006) from Makerere University, Uganda.

He is a lecturer at Makerere University College of Veterinary Medicine, Uganda.

Currently, he holds an Early Career Research Leader (ECRLF) post doctoral Fellowship and is working with Prof. Darrell Abernethy to investigate the roles of wildlife in poverty alleviation and livelihood improvement for rural communities around conservation areas in South Africa and Uganda.
