

MAdmin (Public Management and Policy) - 07251162

Summary of the programme

The SPMA offers an integrated degree, namely the MAdmin in Public Management and Policy (07251162), which combines two degrees previously offered separately, namely the MAdmin in Public Management and Public Administration and the MPhil in Public Policy. The programme is a research-focused degree which caters for students who have successfully completed an honours degree in Public Administration, Public Management or a related field of study. A student's research topic will determine which trajectory (public administration, public management or public policy) is followed by an individual student.

The MAdmin programme aims at providing graduates, public managers and administrators with the key research skills they need in order to investigate and address the various challenges faced by the public sector in the context of a developing or transitional country. The programme targets individuals who have research and/or practical experience and who are motivated to investigate, assess and analyse the controversies, challenges and issues associated with the core functions of the public sector. Students are expected to come up with solutions that would enhance the capabilities of the public sector and not to merely describe problems. The programme would also prepare students to gain insights into the challenges and opportunities of a career in today's public administration and management environment as they will be exposed to various research methods and comparative approaches related to the discipline while focused on their selected subject area or topic. Candidates must write their thesis on a topic that is in line with the Department's research focus areas.

The programme is designed to meet the needs of a new generation of leaders in South Africa and even beyond the national borders as it intends to assist students to confront the challenges faced by the public sector through meaningful research projects.
