Africa's Global Law Faculty

TUKSLAW students World Champions

The Faculty of Law of the University of Pretoria won the International Criminal Trial Moot Court Competition in The Hague, in The Netherlands in December 2007. A total of 14 top faculties of law from around the world were invited to participate.

It is envisaged that learners from all schools in South Africa and its neighbouring countries will be invited to the Pretoria Schools Moot Court Competition in future.

Michael Dafel, Andrew Molver, Avani Singh and Jonathan Swanepoel argued a hypothetical case based on some of the contentious issues surrounding the International Criminal Court.

The Tuks team kicked off their presentations by echoing the vision first expressed by former UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan: 'that in the creation of an International Criminal Court lay the hope for international justice'.

The jury noted that many of the points debated during the competition had not been foreseen during the drafting of the International Criminal Court's statute.

The Pretoria team won an additional award for the best memorial, prepared by Jonathan Swanepoel.

TUKSLAW team Continental Champions

The University of Pretoria won the 17th African Human Rights Moot Court Competition which ended on 5 July 2008.

The team also won the prize for the best English memorials. The Competition, which is presented annually by the Centre for Human Rights, took place on the campus of the University of Pretoria, to coincide with UP's centenary year. A record number of teams representing 71 law faculties from 28 countries across Africa participated in a closely contested competition.

In the final round, the Tuks team merged by draw of lots with the University of Ghana and Eduardo Mondlane University in Mozambique and appeared for the Applicant. Arguing, as though before the recently-established African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights, a hypothetical problem which involved the 'right not to be poor', this new team appeared against the combined team of Université Gaston Berger de Saint-Louis, Senegal, Université Mohammed Premier, Oujda, Morocco, and the University of Lagos, Nigeria, who appeared for the Respondent.

Johann Spies was the coach and Mr Lourens Grové the coordinator.

Ian Learmonth, Katherine Harding, Avani Singh and coach Jo Spies.

Hoof van Privaatreg Waarnemende Regter

Prof Trynie Boezaart, Hoof van die Departement Privaatreg, het gedurende die tweede termyn tussen 14 April en 20 Junie waargeneem as regter van die Hooggeregshof in Pretoria, nadat sy deur regter-president Bernard Ngoepe genader is.

Prof Trynie Boezaart

"Om waarnemende regter te wees, was vir my 'n groot uitdaging en 'n verrykende geleentheid. Uitdagend omdat die pos normaalweg praktykserwaring verg en ek dit vanuit 'n akademiese agtergrond moes benader. Verrykend, omdat ek hier die geleentheid gehad het om my akademiese kennis toe te pas. Voorwaar 'n hoogtepunt in my beroepslewe", sê sy.

Prof Boezaart het onder meer strafappèlle, volbankbeslissings, siviele gedinge, bestrede en onbestrede mosies, spesiale hersienings en petisies waarin verlot tot appèl in stafsake aangeteken word, hanteer. Sy is ook blootgestel aan 'n groot gedeelte van die straf- en siviele werk wat in die Hooggeregshof gedoen word. Volgens haar is haar taak egter vergemaklik deur haar bedrewe klerk, Suzette van Heerden.

"Dit was ook interessant om betrokke te wees by die toelating van advokate, prokureurs, aktevervaardigers en natuurlik om ons oudstudeerders raak te loop."

Prof Boezaart is beïndruk met die hoë etiese en akademiese standaarde wat deur die Transvaalse Provinsiale Afdeling van die Hooggeregshof gehandhaaf word.

Exceptional achievers in the Faculty honoured

Prof Christof Heyns, Dean, with Prof Johan Scott; John Dugard (keynote speaker at the event); André Boraine and Stu Woolman.

The University honoured 23 of its academics as exceptional achievers and celebrated the high calibre of their work in the fields of research, education and learning on 14 March 2008. Three of these academics were from the Faculty of Law.

The awards are divided into three categories: the Chancellor's Award, the Exceptional Achievers Award and the Exceptional Young Researchers Award.

Prof André Boraine, Head of the Department of Procedural Law and Prof Johan Scott from the Department of Private Law received Exceptional Achievers Awards. These awards are made for a three-year period. Other current holders of the award are Prof Frans Viljoen, Trynie Boezaart and Christof Heyns. Prof Stuart Woolman from the Department of Public Law received the Exceptional Young Researchers Award.

The Exceptional Achievers Awards is hosted annually to honour academics who are leaders in their field and serve as role models to the UP community. According to Prof Calie Pistorius, Vice-Chancellor and Principal of the University of Pretoria, the exceptional achievers deliver key inputs to the University's core business and therefore deserve the University's moral and material support. "One of the University of Pretoria's key driving forces is its commitment to delivering quality research outputs. We are, therefore, extremely proud of these people who are responsible for establishing and maintaining the University's reputation as the leading research university in the country," Prof Pistorius said.

Prof Danny Bradlow appointed as SARChI Chair

Prof Danny Bradlow has been appointed as the holder of the SARChI Chair in International Development Law and Africa Economic Relations jointly in the Faculty of Law and the Faculty of Economic and Management Sciences.

Prof Bradlow, born in South Africa, is Professor of Law and Director of the International Legal Studies Programme, and Co-ordinator of the Hubert H Humphrey Fellowship and International Visitors Programmes at the American University is Washington College of Law, in Washington DC, where he specializes in International Economic Law.

He is a member of the Roster of Experts for the International Review Mechanism at the African Development Bank, and a member of the Board of Directors of ILEAP (International Lawyers and Economists Against Poverty) and of the Governing board of the African Law Institute. He focuses on international financial institutions, creative financing for development, international legal aspects of sustainable and equitable development, and the legal aspects of debt and financial management.

The South African Research Chair Initiative or SARChI is funded by the Department of Science and Technology through the National Research Foundation (NRF). Prof Bradlow is currently at the University of Pretoria for short periods of time. He will be in a full-time capacity from January 2009.

The two main research areas which will be promoted by the SARChI Chair is Global Economic Governance and how it relate to Africa, as well as Sustainable Development and Infrastructures Projects and related legal issues.

Prof Bradlow and the researchers associated with his Chair will occupy a house close the Faculty of Law's northern parking area which has been made available for this purpose. Prof Bradlow hopes to turn the house into an intellectual hub where people can have discussions and interact.

"I regard the people I work with here as very dynamic and entrepreneurial. They are constantly looking for development possibilities for students and staff. They also contribute towards South Africa and the region. I hope that the Chair can contribute towards that goal", he said.

Prof Bradlow's biggest challenge in the new position would be defining a research agenda that is broad enough to incorporate PhDs, is do-able and makes a decisive contribution. His goal is also to create international collaboration.

Prof Bradlow holds degrees from the University of Witwatersrand and Northeastern University and Georgetown University in the USA and is a member of the New York and District of Columbia Bars.

Kenner van internasionale reg aangestel

Regter Albert Hoffmann is aan die begin van Augustus in die Departement Publiekreg aangestel. Regter Hoffmann is 'n Regter van die Seeregtribunaal in Hamburg, Duitsland.

Voor sy verkiesing tot die Tribunaal in 2005 was hy Hoofstaatsregsadviseur in die Departement van Buitelandse Sake. Vanaf 1999 tot 2003 was hy ook Suid-Afrika se regsvertegenwoordiger by die Verenigde Nasies in New York.

Tydens sy studies ontwikkel hy 'n belangstelling in die internasionale reg en na 'n kort tydperk in die prokureurspraktyk sluit hy in 1983 by Buitelandse Sake aan as staatsregsadviseur. "Dit was omtrent die enigste plek waar internasionale reg in die praktyk beoefen kon word." Gedurende hierdie tyd verwerf hy 'n Meestersgraad in internasionale reg aan die Universiteit van Johannesburg en doen verdere nagraadse studie aan sowel die Universiteit van Pretoria as Columbia University in New York.

As staatsregsadviseur is hy betrokke by staatkundige en internasionale onderhandelings wat sou lei tot 'n demokratiese bedeling in Suid-Afrika en adviseer hy 'n tegniese komitee oor die insluiting van internasionaalregtelike bepallings in die nuwe Grondwet. Hy was verder gemoed in onderhandelinge met die VN Hoë Kommissaris vir Vluchtlinge vir die repatriasie van politieke vluchtlinge, die tuislande se herinkorporering in Suid-Afrika, Namibië se onafhanklikwording en die uiteindelijke oordrag van Walvisbaai. Hy adviseer ook die nuutverkose Regering oor sake rakende Suid-Afrika se hertoetreding tot die internasionale gemeenskap en die sluiting van internasionale verdrae en ooreenkomste. Hy verteenwoordig Suid-Afrika in verskeie internasionale organisasies waar hy ook 'n leidende rol gespeel het en instrumenteel was in Suid-Afrika se ratifisering van die VN se Seeregkonvensie.

"As Regter van in 'n internasionale hof is daar 'n groot verantwoordelijkheid om my en my kollegas om toe te sien dat geskille tussen state rakende die uitleg en toepassing van die Seereg asook ander reëls van die internasionale reg wat daarmee verband hou op 'n vreedsame en regverdigde wyse bygelê word. Daar word dikwels na die VN Seeregkonvensie verwys as die Grondwet vir die See aangesien dit den doel het om alles wat met die see en sy bronne te make het, te beheer."

"Vir my is dit 'n uitdaging om weer op hoogte van akademiese ontwikkelings te kom en om die hele spektrum van die vakgebied weer onder die knie te kry. Ek geniet die klassituasie en om met studente te werk. Ek het 'n deernis vir jong mense se situasie en wil hulle graag ontmoet net daar waar hulle is", sê hy.

"Ek dink respek teenoor 'n medemens, die handhawing van beskaafde waardes en om jouself nie hoër as 'n ander te ag nie, is baie belangrik. Ek sien myself as 'n vredemaker wat poog om vreedsame oplossings te kry wat tot alle partye se voordeel is."

"Die Universiteit van Pretoria is bekend vir uitnemendheid en slaag wat my betref besonder goed daarin om die oorgangs- en transformasieproses suksesvol deur te voer. Ek beskou dit as 'n voorreg om my lang verbintenis met die Regsfakulteit op hierdie wyse te kan voortsit", sê hy.

Child Justice Bill passed by the National Assembly

The Centre for Child Law has been centrally involved with the Child Justice Bill which was passed by the National Assembly on 25 June 2008. The journey to that event has been a long one: the Bill began its life at the South African Law Reform Commission in 1996. Ann Skelton (currently the Director of the Centre for Child Law) chaired the committee that produced the first draft. The Bill was initially introduced to parliament in 2002, and deliberations on it occurred during 2003. At that time various changes were made that were not reflective of the constitutional protections of children. The Bill's progress in Parliament was halted by the 2004 elections, and the Bill just 'disappeared' from the parliamentary agenda for five years.

There was thus much excitement when the Centre received the news late in 2007 that the Child Justice Bill would be back in Parliament.

The Portfolio Committee on Justice organised public hearings on the Bill in February this year because the Bill had been significantly changed. The new chairperson of the Portfolio Committee, Yunus Carrim, conducted the hearings and the deliberations following the hearings in a very democratic way, and civil society representatives were able to participate actively.

The Centre made written and oral submissions at the hearings. Whilst it was good to see the Bill back in Parliament, there were concerns about the changes that had been made to the Bill in 2003. The Centre's submissions therefore focused on three aspects: assessment, preliminary inquiry and diversion.

The original Bill has required that all children be assessed by a probation officer prior to the first appearance, so that there would be good quality information available to decide on crucial matters. One such decision is whether a child's case could be 'diverted' away from the formal court system to a specially designed programme of plan, thereby being rehabilitated but avoiding contact with criminals and not getting a criminal record.

If a child is not diverted, then other decisions have to be made, such as whether the child may be released into the care of parents to await trial, or if he or she has to be detained, and if so which kind of detention. This type of decision is made at a preliminary inquiry (which takes the place of a first appearance in court). The changes to the Bill in 2003 had resulted in assessment and preliminary inquiry only being available in cases where children were charged with less serious crimes – the others would be fast-tracked into courts and detention.

The Centre's submissions explained why this would defeat the objects of the Bill: although serious cases need a different response from minor ones, good decisions can only be made if one has sufficient information about the child and his or her circumstances. This would actually serve to protect both the child and broader society as it would allow for better risk management. The Centre also felt that diversion should be available for consideration in all matters, though obviously in serious cases it would be highly unlikely that the prosecution would utilise this option. The 2003 Bill had simply cut out certain categories of offences from the possibility of diversion.

Of course, such arguments are not easy to make in the run up to elections in a country where everyone is concerned about crime. The Centre's position though, was that we must really re-think the way in which we deal with child offenders if we want to prevent and reduce crime, because what we are doing now clearly is not working.

The Centre's views were taken seriously by the Portfolio Committee, and many of the things campaigned for were won. Ann Skelton was co-opted onto a legal drafting sub-committee to assist with the finalisation of the Bill. On the day that the Bill was passed in Parliament her contribution was publicly acknowledged by the Minister of Justice. The Minister said (with a smile) that she had heard about the 'robust debates' in Parliament and that she appreciated the contributions made.

This is not the end of the journey for the Child Justice Bill. It must still be approved by the National Council of Provinces, but the Portfolio Committee is committed to it being passed this year. It is slated for implementation only in April 2010, in order to give the departments time to get everything in order.

Pretoria Schools Moot Court Competition

The Faculty of Law recently introduced the Pretoria Schools Moot Court Competition, aimed at exposing aspirant law students to the law in a court room environment. The competition was also used to discover young talent who wish to pursue a law career.

Secondary schools in the Tshwane region were invited to send teams to participate.

The grand prize was financial assistance to the members of the winning team for the first year of legal studies at the University of Pretoria. This prize was won by the team from Loreto Convent, Margaret Ramano and Kelebogile Maphefo Khuduge. Alexandra Knight and Chevawn Blum from St Mary's Diocesan Schools for girls, were the runners-up. Margaret Ramano was also declared Best Oralist.

Eighteen schools from all areas of Pretoria entered the competition. Each school was represented by one team and each team consisted of two learners.

Each team acted as advocates appearing before a simulated South African Constitutional Court, arguing the opposing sides of a hypothetical case, dealing with a learner who insisted on his right to wear dreadlocks to school.

The winners of the competition, Margaret Ramano and Kelebogile Maphefo Khuduge with Judge Johann van der Westhuizen and Prof Christof Heyns, Dean.

The participating teams were invited to the University of Pretoria two weeks before the competition and were coached by TuksLaw students who have participated in international Moot Court Competitions.

Judges of the competition included from left Adv Danie van Loggerenberg; Judge Johann van der Westhuizen; and Drr Ann Skelton and Anton Kok.

More than 200 people attended the final round of the competition in the Auditorium.

Specialist in children's rights new Director

Dr Ann Skelton

Dr Ann Skelton has been appointed as the new Director of the Centre for Child Law.

Before being appointed, Dr Skelton was the Project Coordinator for the Children's Litigation Project.

Dr Skelton has worked as a human rights lawyer for 18 years and has since 1992 specialised in children's rights. In the 1990s, Dr Skelton was at the forefront of non-governmental efforts to bring about a new juvenile justice system for South Africa.

From 1999 to 2003, she was the National Project Coordinator of the Child Justice Project. This was a United Nations technical assistance project of the South African Government. The project won an Impumelelo Award for innovation.

Dr Skelton has presented papers at numerous conferences across the world and has published widely on child law and restorative justice. Dr Skelton has lectured to both undergraduate and postgraduate students. She has travelled extensively and is a member of various national and international bodies dealing with human rights and children's rights.

The aim of the Children's Litigation Project project is to take public interest impact litigation to the courts in order to advance child law and children's rights. The work includes devising and maintaining a litigation strategy, screening and identifying cases for suitability or building cases that will establish rights for a group of children. The project undertakes research to support the litigation, drafts legal documents, brings and defends cases before the superior courts, and publicises court findings through relevant journals and newsletters. The Centre for Child Law has been involved in several high profile cases, and Dr Skelton appeared twice before the Constitutional Court last year, presenting amicus curiae submissions.

Dr Skelton's vision for the Centre for Child Law is to promote and develop the recognition of child law so that it is taken seriously as an important area of law. She believes that this will be achieved through strategic test litigation, as well as through writing and teaching about new laws and legal developments relating to children. Her aim is to mainstream the knowledge of child law to a wide range of legal academics and practitioners. Children will benefit from the increased knowledge of their rights and of protective provisions designed to assist them.

Students visit other African countries

The group who visited Rwanda in front of a resident's home.

LLM students in front of the Special Court of Sierra Leone.

LLM group in information session with Saleem Vahidy in Sierra Leone.

LLM group with Ray Cardinal in front of detention facilities in Sierra Leone.

A team of 32 students from the Faculty of Law undertook a human rights study trip to three African countries; Sierra Leone, Rwanda and Somaliland, in June. This is part of the LLM programme in Human Rights and Democratisation in Africa, presented by the Centre for Human Rights. For the first time LLB students were included in the delegation.

The students were divided into three groups. Each group was accompanied by an academic staff member and an administrative staff member. They met with government officials and human rights activists and experienced the legal systems in action.

The visit to Rwanda was aimed at making the students fully aware of the 1994 genocide and its causes. The students met with senior government officials, visited prisons and genocide sites. They also attended a hearing of the Gacaca courts. They interacted with non-governmental organisations involved in rehabilitating victims and offenders. An important part of the visit was spending time at the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR).

While in Sierra Leone, the students were exposed to the causes and effects of the civil war that devastated the country. They attended trials at the Special Court for Sierra Leone and engaged with persons involved in prosecuting the main perpetrators of human rights violations and also those who are involved in fostering a culture of reconstruction and development. The students met key players such as government ministers, judges, opposition leaders and legal practitioners.

Part of the LLM programme focuses on the concept of a failed state, secession, state creation and genocide. The visit to Somaliland exposed the students to the democratisation challenges faced by countries in the Horn of Africa. This field trip focused on the issue of democratization, which is a core aspect of the LLM programme.

While in Somaliland, the students met the President of Somaliland, government ministers, Somaliland elders and members of NGOs. They also attended a lecture at the University of Hargeisa.

"Every student who has been on these trips has come back a different person with a richer experience on how they view issues of human rights and democratisation in Africa. These field trips are one of the most important components of this one year programme," said Martin Nsibirwa, LLM Programme Coordinator at the Centre for Human Rights.

Law students participate in Rag

Fun and fundraising is what Rag is all about. This year was no exception. The Tuks Rag Festival has over the years become one of the biggest events on the university's calendar and it is all for the good cause of raising funds for charity.

The Law House and other law students started building floats early in February. The Dean and staff members visited the builders at the Rag farm in support of their hard work and dedication towards this noble task.

Southern African Student Volunteers revived

Ms Gill Jacod-Guillarmod and a student assisted in renovating the toilets.

A project which is part of the process to revive the Southern African Student Volunteers (SASVO) in the Faculty of Law was launched by 15 law students at a school in Mamelodi, during the vacation in July.

The students, who volunteered their labour and skills at the Meetse A Bophelo Primary School in Mamelodi, developed a vegetable garden for the school and also assisted in upgrading the children's toilets.

Meetse A Bophelo has about 2 500 learners and 60 educators. 50 learners between the age of 5 and 12 had the opportunity to help develop the new garden. The learners are given one meal a day and it is hoped that once established, the vegetables from the new garden will ensure that their meals are nutritious and balanced.

"We bought the necessary equipment that they would need to sustain the garden. This included a wheelbarrow; spades; forks; a hose pipe and compost that will last a few months",

At the end 5000 seedlings were planted in preparation of a brighter future for the learners and staff.

said Anchane Kriek, a third year LLB student who assisted in co-ordinating the project.

Most of the law students stayed at the Mamelodi campus of the University of Pretoria. The students assisted in preparing the ground, working in the compost and planting the thousands of seedlings.

The project leader was Francois Wessels, assisted by Anchané Kriek.

As part of their contribution, the parents from Meetse A Bophelo provided lunch for the student volunteers, and some of the older pupils assisted with clearing the grounds. This ties in closely with the University of Pretoria's emphasis on community service as part of the university's focus. SASVO's policy of 50/50 involves working with communities, with half the effort coming from SASVO and half from the communities.

According to the Dean, Prof Heyns, 'the goal is to provide an opportunity to all students to do community service.
