almost self-effacingly, what she hoped would be an acceptable true calling. Realising that her passion for animals transcended After qualifying as an engineer, Angie Fairley surrendered to her equal measure. This provides students with a unique opportunity to enter into the world of animal welfare. The workload is fair and the students learn not only through workshops, but also through practical experience at various veterinary clinics and research stations. One of the premises of the workshop was to educate a dedicated team which is prepared to share their knowledge and skills with others to become involved.

LOATE Community Veterinary Clinic (CVC) Soshanguve

Inaugurated in December 2010, this clinic, under supervision of Dr. Greg Simpson, is the product of a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) to get the station involved in community engagement, in all its forms – from saving reserves (all part of the Great Limpopo Trans-frontier Park) which are not limited to its 37ha fenced terrain or the Mnisi “study area”, but also to pre-primary school children, to combating a rabies outbreak, to investigating wildlife’s role in food security, or to offering courses to interested students in the interface of wildlife, livestock and humans, especially in a transboundary context.

The workload is fair and the students learn not only through workshops, but also through practical experience at various veterinary clinics and research stations. One of the premises of the workshop was to educate a dedicated team which is prepared to share their knowledge and skills with others to become involved.

Visit the UP Community Engagement website regularly for updates about projects and funding opportunities.

Contact person Ms Wendy Carvalho-Malekane Tel: (012) 420-3777 Email: wendy.carvalho-malekane@up.ac.za