Module-inhoud

This elective is designed to introduce students to the theory and practice of Competitive intelligence, including its activity (or processes), organisational structure, and 'products' (i.e. deliverables). In short: What is intelligence? How does it differ from market research and other, more conventional, streams of management information? What are its key roles? How does the intelligence function work? How is it structured in a corporate environment? What added-value does it deliver to business decision-makers?
